Ernesto lives on a farm in Bolivia (a country in South America) with his parents. His parents are __________, and they own their own farm. Ernesto’s grandparents owned the farm before, and gave it to Ernesto’s mother when they became too old to work the land.

Each year, Ernesto and his parents plant __________ and look after the plants that grow. After a few months, they collect their __________. Ernesto’s parents grow enough nutritious __________ to feed their whole ____________. They are very generous. They also __________ their food with their neighbours to make sure no one in their community is ever __________. They sell their extra food at the __________ to earn money to buy clothes and farm tools. In their community, all farmers can bring food to sell in the market. Farmers are also able to decide what the price of their food will be. That way, it is ________ for them.

Ernesto’s parents want to give the farm to Ernesto someday. He helps them with the farm work so that he will __________ how to take care of the land that was created by God. One day, he will be able to grow enough food to feed his own family.
Ernesto’s Family Farm: Fill-in-the-blanks & Wordsearch

Solution

Ernesto lives on a farm in Bolivia (a country in South America) with his parents. His parents are farmers, and they own their own farm. Ernesto’s grandparents owned the farm before, and gave it to Ernesto’s mother when they became too old to work the land.

Each year, Ernesto and his parents plant seeds and look after the plants that grow. After a few months, they collect their harvest! Ernesto’s parents grow enough nutritious food to feed their whole family. They are very generous, and they also share their food with their neighbours to make sure no one in their community is ever hungry. They sell their extra food at the market to earn money to buy clothes and farm tools. In their community, all farmers can bring food to sell in the market. Farmers are also able to decide what price they want to sell their food at – that way, it is fair for them.

Ernesto’s parents want to give the farm to Ernesto someday. He helps them with the farm work so that he will learn how to take care of the land that was created by God. One day, he will be able to grow enough food to feed his own family.